

SCANDI LIVING

Niki Brantmark has been blogging about Swedish style since 2011. We ask her how it started...

My Scandinavian Home

I am Niki Brantmark, a Londoner living in Malmö, Sweden. I've always loved interiors and when I moved to Sweden 10 years ago I couldn't believe how much care Scandinavians put into making their homes beautiful. I now write about stylish interiors on My Scandinavian Home blog, which receives 500,000 page views every month.

Describe your blog.

My Scandinavian Home is an interiors blog featuring daily home tours of Scandinavian inspired spaces. I particularly love dreamy ethereal homes with a vintage or mid-century touch. I also feature cool and simple DIY tips, fun giveaways and tips on the latest trends in the Scandinavian interior design world, as well as where to buy coveted pieces.

What inspired you to start your blog?

I've always been passionate about interiors, but after moving to Sweden I decided to create an online mood board of all the incredible spaces there, so that's how the blog was born.

How did you find the technical side of things?

People are often surprised by how un-technical I am! The thing about blogging is you don't need to be technical in the slightest. If I can blog, anyone can. It's great fun and very rewarding.

Do you have a regular blogging schedule?

I publish a post every weekday morning. I like to see my posts as a little ray of inspiration that readers can enjoy every day with their morning coffee.

What is your favourite website?

Who are your favourite bloggers?

I follow a crazy number of blogs. At the moment I'm really

What are your three favourite pieces?

■ My favourite possession is a vintage Swedish mid-century tea trolley we were given by my parents-in-law (I am married to a Swede).

■ I like to covet fabric by the Finnish creative duo Saana ja Olli. I also own a couple of their cushions, which are inspired by Finnish folklore.

■ Right now I have my eye on a classic Tulip chair from nest.co.uk. It has a seat pad in olive green, which is one of the interior colours of the moment.
